

From: Craig
To: microsoft.atr
Date: 1/23/02 10:31pm
Subject: bad settlement

I remember how Microsoft sold licenses to computer box assemblers entitling them the load the operating system onto the computer before sale to the consumer. Microsoft charged by the total number of computers the assembler sold. So if the assembler's customer (the consumer, aka the American citizen) wanted a different operating system, the customer would pay for paying Microsoft, then on top of that pay for the different operating system. Now that's monopoly.

Better educated than the Taliban, with more opportunities, and always living in a free society, Microsoft has chosen evil at every turn. Reject settlement. Go for dismemberment.